

Mozart Mouse was the first one to have any luck. "Look what I found!" he cried. "It's a piece called Hooray for Hollywood! This will be perfect for the first piece in the book. It's the song that everyone thinks of when they hear about Hollywood. It's been used in so many television shows and movies."

Mozart Mouse's whiskers twitched excitedly when he found the next piece. "Mickey Mouse! I think I might be related to him!" Everyone laughed.

"Actually, this piece was the theme song for The Mickey Mouse Club, one of the first TV shows the Walt Disney company ever produced," Mozart Mouse said. "My parents used to watch it when they were little mice."

J. S. Bunny found the next piece and held it up for his friends to see. "This song is from The Wizard of Oz, one of my favorite movies," he announced. "Judy Garland played Dorothy. Her hand and footprints are in the cement at Grauman's Chinese Theater, a famous Hollywood landmark. I bet Clara would love to see that," he sighed.

"I know this one," Elgar E. Elephant said importantly, showing off another piece of music. "After all, my ancestors are from the jungle." Then he laughed. "But the real reason I know this song is because it's from my favorite movie, The Lion King."

"I love that movie, too!" added Mozart Mouse. "Many movies are made in Los Angeles. The Walt Disney Studios are there."
