

As the limousine pulled up in front of Grauman's Chinese Theater, Beethoven Bear exclaimed, "Oh, now I see why it's called a Chinese Theater. Look at the entrance—it looks like a pagoda. And over there is a huge dragon!"

Clara Schumann-Cat swished her tail excitedly. At last, she was in Hollywood! But she couldn't pass up the opportunity to teach her friends a little something about music. "I know a very famous song about a dragon called Puff (the Magic Dragon). It was made popular by the singing group Peter, Paul and Mary." And then she began to sing.

“Look at these funny footprints! They’re huge!” cried J. S. Bunny as he compared his foot to the shape in the cement.
 Puccini Pooch smiled. “Have you ever heard of the Star Wars movies? The world premiere of the first movie in this series was held right here at Grauman’s. These are the footprints of Darth Vader, one of villains in the movie. He even had his own musical theme.” Puccini Pooch began to hum it.

As they continued walking, Puccini Pooch asked Nina Ballerina, "What's your favorite movie?" "Oh," she sighed wistfully, "that would be Mary Poppins. I just love all of the dancing in the movie." Pachelbel Penguin flapped his wings in excitement. "The best part is when the penguins dance with Mary Poppins and Bert, the Chimney Sweep." Beethoven Bear chimed in, "Doesn't that movie have a song with a funny name? Super-california-delicious or something like that." Everyone laughed. Clara purred knowingly, "You're thinking of Supercalifragilisticexpialidocious. It's a nonsense word that is used to describe the longest word in the English language. It makes you sound smart when you can say it!"

The music friends sat on an outside patio at the restaurant and could see the waves washing in to the shore. "This was the best day ever," Mozart Mouse declared.

"Your big adventure isn't over yet," Puccini Pooch reminded him. "I have two more surprises planned. Tomorrow, we are all going to Disneyland in the city of Anaheim."

"Disneyland!" everyone cried. "I hope we get to see Winnie the Pooh," Beethoven Bear said. "And a princess," added Nina Ballerina.

"Let's go on the Pirate's of the Caribbean ride!" Pachelbel Penguin suggested.
